

Automatically Notify Users About AD Password Expiration

SysOp Tools' Password Reminder Pro for Windows Active Directory

I've been using SysOp Tools' Password Reminder Pro for Windows Active Directory software for some time now and, frankly, it rocks. The software, which automatically notifies users about their expiring AD passwords, is the tool to have and beats all other products and scripts that I've used. The software literally takes five minutes to install and set up—requiring no coding, scripting, or AD mods—and I can test it in a live environment without disrupting users. Before Password Reminder Pro sends an email to users requiring them to change their password, I can completely customize the message using Notepad or any standard HTML editor. We currently use the reminder emails as a self-help portal that links to change-password services and Help desk contacts.

Since installing Password Reminder Pro, our support calls have gone down to virtually zero and through receipt of the friendly password-expiration reminder emails, our users feel a lot more involved. Our remote and local domain account users who normally wouldn't receive an expiring password notice can now receive a notice regardless of their OS, locale, or VPN method. This cuts down on expired password calls to the Help desk, especially late at night from foreign offices. SysOp Tools also has a very responsive support staff and has even built a custom mod to Password Reminder Pro for our company's specific internal security needs—at no cost. The software's auditing console is also nice, and provides a quick report status on all user objects in the domain.
